The Sailor's Farewell.

So fare theewell, my dearest friend,
Thy husband now must go
To greet his native element,
Where winds and tempests blow.

And blessings rest with thee, my dear,
My prayers thus ever flow;
While crossing o'er the pathless deep,
Where winds and temperts blow.

His greatest wish and strong desire,
Is that your joys may flow,
From sins forgiven, through Jesus' name,
Where winds and tempests blow.

And now through life we'll sweetly steer.
Together onward go;
Till we arrive at that blest port,
Where storms will cease to blow.

Verses on parting with a Friend

No more my friend, my dearest friend,
At disappointments grieve;
Can streaming tears our souls defend,
Or sighs, our woes relieve?

Adversity is virtue's school,
To those who right discern,
Let us observe each painful rule,
And each hard lesson learn.

When wintry clouds, obscure the sky,
And heaven and earth deform;
If fixed thy strong foundations lie,
The castle braves the storm.

Thus fix'd on faith's unfailing rock,
Let us endure awhile,
Temptations rude, impetuous shock,
And glory in our toil.

Affliction cannot always last,
Or though it should remain,
Yet we each painful moment haste,
A better world to gain.

And though we part in body here,
Our minds continue one,
Till we shall in the skies appear,
To praise the eternal Son.

Where Calumny no more shall wound,
Nor faithless friends destroy;
Where rectitude, and truth are crown'd,
With everlasting joy.

Poetry

Twenty-four years have fled and gone,
Passed like a dream, how swift the days:
How has God's patience borne so long,
With rebel worm?—to Him be praise.

How many dangers have pass'd o'er
This guilty head while on the seas,
By day, by night, each moment, hour,
God has preserved— to Him be praise.

In sickly climes in foreign lands,
'Midst rolling waves, I've seen thy ways;
Here like a monument I stand,
By God preserved— to Him be praise.

How has his arm been ever near
For my support, when lightnings blaze,
And thunders roll'd, when trembling fear
Disturb'd my breast— to Him be praise.

When toss'd upon the stormy wave
Our trembling bark, with fearful gaze
I've viewed thy power, how near the grave,
But God preserved— to Him be praise.
